How Tracy Does It. Sheriff Tracy is the man that has faith in humanity, and the way he cares for the unfortunate (or otherwise) people placed in his charge continues to attract not only state wide but national attention. Only the other day he let the whole bunch of prisoners go to the moving pictures, and did not have an officer accompany them. Every man showed at the Tracy flome after the show. By showing that he has confidence in them is the successful way in which Sheriff Tracy controls his prisoners,—Waterbury Record.

Readjusting the Main Line, The Northfield News prints the fol-owing timely comment "If the purchase of the Langdon meadows in Montpelier by the Central Vermont Railway company means that the main line of its tracks is to be changed to a nearer point to that city, the general public, as well as the Capital city, will be exceedingly glad. The News has believed for a good many years in the idea, and occasionally advocated practicability of changing the main line of the railroad from somewhere near West Berlin and running it directly into Montpelier. It is still of the opinion that such a plan could be carried out to the financial advantage of both the railroad company and that city. As The News does not yet own a controlling in terest in the Grand Trunk, it cannot at this time do more than advocate the feasibility of such a plan or any plan that will do away with the present inconveniences. It is no secret that the original construction of the Central Vermont, formerly the Vermont Central, so as to leave the Capital city as well as Burlington away from the main line was dictated by considerations personal to these pioneers in railway construction rather than by economic or geographical factors in the situation. Whatever these affuences may have been, however, sound railroading principles should be given due
